Bayesian nonparametric models have been widely used in modern applications. In this talk, I will focus on a set of function estimation problems (e.g., density estimation, high-dimensional partial linear regression and independent component analysis), and discuss some theoretical results including minimax optimal rates, adaptation and Bernstein-von Mises theorem. I will also talk about computational methods that avoid the use of Markov chain Monte Carlo.